

Fatal gene identified

A new drug could suppress a gene that causes pulmonary hypertension, a fatal and incurable heart and lung condition. A study has identified a gene that is switched on in the blood vessels of the lung in pulmonary hypertension. Scientists are now working to produce a drug that would disable this gene. The findings were published in the journal Nature.

Times
August 11-2015