

Blinks of dying victim convict sex abuse vicar

A former vicar who abused a choirboy more than 35 years ago was sentenced to four years in jail after a trial during which his victim, who was dying of motor neurone disease, gave evidence using technology that turned his blinks into words. Cyril Rowe, 78, was jailed by Bournemouth crown court for three indecent assaults at a Tower Hamlets church between 1979 and 1981. His victim, Michael Kelsick, 47, died before hearing the verdict.
