

Sick baby kept alive

Doctors must continue to treat a terminally-ill baby for three weeks to give European judges time to consider his case, the Supreme Court has ruled. Charlie Gard, ten months, has a rare genetic condition and brain damage. Doctors have said life support should end. His parents want him to try a new therapy in America but have exhausted all legal options in Britain.

Times 20.6.17