

Anne Robinson talks on TV about her abortion

Anne Robinson will talk about having an abortion as part of a documentary marking 50 years since the practice was partially decriminalised.

The Weakest Link presenter said it was "out of the question" not to discuss her experience in 1968, and that doing so was a vital part of the filmmaking process.

In the BBC programme, called Abortion On Trial, Ms Robinson invites nine people with conflicting views on the topic to her Gloucestershire home to share their personal stories.

"How can I ask other people to do that... it was out of the question keeping quiet myself," she said. The programme will be shown on Monday.
